The Mitogen-Activated Protein Kinase (MAPK) family consists of three parallel kinase signaling pathways: the Jun N-terminal kinase (JNK)/stress-activated protein kinase (SAPK), the p38/HOG1 (Highly Organized Gelatinase 1) and the extracellular-regulated kinases (ERKs). The JNK/SAPK is activated by a variety of stress signals and functions in the cellular response to proinflammatory cytokines, apoptosis, cell differentiation, oncogenesis, and other cellular stresses. p38-MAPKs constitute a superfamily of 3 distinct MAPKs (p38, p44 and p42) which are all activated by proinflammatory cytokines and environmental stresses. The ERKs (MAPK/ERK) are a family of three serine/threonine kinases with at least 22 identified members. Members of the ERK family share a highly conserved catalytic domain with the activated MAPKs from the JNK and p38 families, but they do not directly activate their substrates. They function by activating a number of cytoplasmic and nuclear proteins that mediate their biological effects. The normal activation of p38, ERKs and JNKs is regulated by a number of growth factors, cytokines, UV light and stress inducers such as osmotic stress, heat shock and oxidative stress. Activation of the JNK, p38 and ERK kinases is required for the full expression of genes associated with the inflammatory process. The specific role of MAPKs in cancer has been demonstrated for ERK (Sivaraman et al, J. Biol. Chem., 1998, 273, 18825-18830). The level of ERK expression has been correlated to tumour aggressiveness and decreased survival in patients with cancer of different origins. ERK-positive cancer cells appear to be dependent on ERK activation for growth and propagation. In addition, induction of cyclin D1 expression and activation of the cell cycle progression by EGF (epidermal growth factor) has been shown to be mediated by a requirement for ERK-dependent threonine phosphorylation of ETS1 (Vogel et al, Nature 1992
