What's New In?

What the application can do for you is animate your desktop using videos and GIFs, which it plays without requiring any other adjustments on the user's side. Helps you play GIFs and videos on your desktop Sporting an approachable user interface, BioniX Video Wallpaper Animator packs a set of basic editing tools you can resort to in order to customize the resulting dynamic wallpaper. First and foremost, you need to indicate the folder bundling the files you are interested in, with the mention that both GIFs and videos are supported. As for the latter, you can choose anything from AVI, MPEG, MP4, and WMV to OGG, MOV, 3GP, and more. You then need to select the item you want to see on your desktop and look into the panel on the right for a series of adjustments you can make. You may, for instance, opt for a blank desktop or add color in specific areas for better visibility. Lets you easily customize your animated wallpaper Aside from that, you can choose between automatic and user-defined frame delay, and as regards the scale of the video playing on the desktop, you may indicate a percentage. Regardless of your options, the CPU usage is displayed at the bottom of the main window so that you can always know more about the program's memory footprint. There is room for improvement All in all, BioniX Video Wallpaper Animator is a lightweight program whose purpose is to create dynamic wallpapers using your favorite GIFs and videos as a starting point. The program is easy to interact with, but its set of features is rather modest. What's more, during our tests, we have experienced some performance hiccups when trying to play some videos, so it could use some improvement in order to stand out from the crowd.
