Book Review: "An Oral History of Texas Woman Suffrage", by Shirley B. Reeder In the summer of 2010, I was on a press trip to Austin, Texas, as a member of a press pool working with the Texas Women's Suffrage Association (TWSA). I was there mainly to assist the TWSA in its efforts to restore their state historical marker to the front door of the State Capitol building. But, in addition to that, I was also working on my own manuscript, "An Oral History of Texas Woman Suffrage", which had won a national writing contest sponsored by The National Coalition for Women's Status Abroad (NCWSA). Although I was not sure how my research would be received by the press and by the TWSA's supporters, I had high hopes that the version I would present to the TWSA would be well received and help gain additional press coverage for the cause of women's suffrage in Texas. The press trip to Austin was fun and instructive. The press pool consisted of seven other women, including a representative from The Texas Tribune and two from the national media. The highlight of our press trip was a tour of the Capitol building and a demonstration of the restoration process. But the highlight of the TWSA was the press conference on the afternoon of the second day of the press trip. The original marker, depicting Susan B. Anthony, was destroyed in the 1930s. A small plaque erected in the central foyer depicts the event, but does not tell the whole story about the campaign and the work for women's suffrage in Texas. In 1999, the idea of restoring the original marker was suggested as a way of helping gain the support of women's suffrage advocates. Martha Rippon, the former executive director of the Texas Equal Rights Center and now the executive director of the Women's Rights Historical Society of Texas, has been advocating for the restoration of the marker for many years. I did not know anything about the marker restoration effort until I started working on my manuscript. I then tried to find out about the marker restoration because I wanted to add my research into the manuscript. Some of the things I found out, while very interesting, were shocking, like the fact that the historical marker restoration was initiated without the active involvement of women's suffrage advocates. While the story of the restoration was interesting, it was the interviews with women's suffrage advocates and members of the community that really surprised me. The advocates, each with very strong opinions about women's suffrage
