FIFA, which stands for "Fédération Internationale de Football Association", is the biggest and best football (soccer) simulation franchise in the world. FIFA '21 doesn't have the official licenses from the European leagues or the individual teams, and lacks the innovations that will be implemented with the upcoming FIFA "22" title. In other words, it's the same old FIFA, just with fewer licenses and less innovation. FIFA '22 was announced at EA Play 2016 (June 12-13, 2016) during the keynote presentation. FIFA '22 will feature far-reaching gameplay enhancements, and it is being called "the biggest leap forward in the FIFA franchise's history." With the launch of FIFA '22, EA also announced their much-anticipated long-awaited Virtual Pro license program, which will allow players to create their own players with new motions, skills and sets of attributes, but will not have an online profile or participation in Pro Clubs. These licenses will be available for £49.99 ($59.99) and are available exclusively to those who buy FIFA '22 before the end of the year, so that they are able to activate the licensing option when the game is released later in 2016. All these great features (and many more) will be included in EA SPORTS FIFA '22. The real-life league schedules will be available. FIFA '21 on Pro Clubs has tons of glitches and dumb features that made us extremely unhappy. That's why we're all so excited for FIFA '22 because we're finally going to have another FIFA game, which we're willing to buy a license for, which won't put us through hell like FIFA '21 did. On May 9, 2016, EA Sports released FIFA '22, and they made it crystal clear that they will update FIFA '21 via patches if necessary. They also stated that EA is "committed to further evolving the game's overall experience and delivering the best- ever version of FIFA '21." We're going to be playing FIFA '22, and we expect it to be a hell of a lot better than FIFA '21. The gameplay will be much better, with defensive AI improvements, and the passing animation is much more realistic. The HUD will also get a lot of improvement. We're anticipating a lot more from the new features than what FIFA '21 has to offer, including new features for 1v1 online and offline play (
