You can download chart data and add-in content from the depthfinder's built-in 2-way ANT+ radio. I also used BlueChart Mobile with Garmin StreetPilot, which allows you to upload, manage and share your own waypoints, routes, trails, courses, waypoints and track. These features are dependent on your Garmin device and the app. Both Garmin apps are compatible with tablets and smartphones running iOS 8.1 or above, Android 5.0 or above and the Windows platform (8 or higher). BlueChart Mobile can also be used with older iOS devices by downloading iOS 6 or later. I found that it is possible to get most of the features of BlueChart Mobile by downloading Garmin StreetPilot (i.e., via the Marine & Boating section of the App Store) but that the features depend on the device that you are using. I found that the 8-inch iPad has the most scrolling and zooming of the devices I tried. While I have experience with Garmin's Garmin StreetPilot, I've never used BlueChart Mobile. While the Apple software performs well on the iPad Air 2, I have to wonder how it would perform on a third- or fourth-generation iPad. Getting the best performance is partly a matter of determining whether you're using the mobile or the app version of StreetPilot and which apps you're using. Transfer your data to a compatible Garmin device via BlueChart on Navigator or Explore: Transfer data from the device to your compatible computer over the Garmin Services. Bluetooth connection with Explorer Marine required. Bluetooth connection with Navigator Marine not required. You can also use your compatible device to transfer your data to a compatible Garmin device. Connect it to your PC with a USB cable, and it will auto-detect a compatible Garmin device and automatically transfer route information.

On the Garmin side, there's BaseCamp for users with a PC and the Garmin Pilot software. It handles base maps, dynamic charts and more. BaseCamp is available for Mac, Windows, Linux and iOS users. With BaseCamp you can import entire BaseCamp™ cartographies at once. Navigation information and keypoints are displayed on the charts and can be manually added to a chart by you. BaseCamp does not contain any of the downloaded charts supplied with this software. BaseCamp is intended to be used with a Garmin GPS that can be programmed to a serial or USB port. In case your chart plotter came preloaded with BlueChart G3 charts, you can update them online or visit a Garmin dealer to buy the update on a card. Update cards are available for selected GPSMAP and echoMAP ranges, and these generally cost around 50% of the cost of the equivalent new charts. There are many situations where it may be desirable to install additional maps to a Garmin GPS. Mapsource should only be used when working with a outdoor handhelds that uses a serial port connection to a computer. Newer handhelds that use a USB computer connection should use BaseCamp. Garmin BlueChart g3 Vision Australia and New Zealand charts are available in two sizes; Regular and Large (the larger the chart, the more land/coast is included in the coverage). Click HERE for more information on 'Regular' or HERE for more information on 'Large'. To update via WiFi using Garmin Connect Mobile, an internet connection is required. The mobile application can be downloaded from the Appstore for iPhone or Droid. To update via serial cable, you need to be connected to a device that can be updated via serial cable, and a Garmin USB serial cable is required to connect the computer to the device. A serial cable costs approximately $35 in the US, Canada and Australia 5ec8ef588b
