Laparoscopic ultrasonography (LUS) allows dynamic real-time ultrasound examination of peritoneal and abdominal cavity structures, including the peritoneum, liver, spleen, kidney, and small and large bowel, without the need for exogenous contrast agents or anesthesia. LUS allows dynamic assessment of these structures during laparoscopic surgery. This review explores the technique of LUS and evaluates some of its current applications in the field of gynecology, urology, and general surgery.Q: Is Golang mandatory to build if my code requires anything more than language features and a compiler? I have written a program that does some network programming using gRPC and websockets. I have used datalog and dataflow. I have tried to compile using cgo, and the dependency on net/grpc is clearly causing issues. So my question is: Can I compile that code and run it without any Go dependencies and if so, what files/filesystem f988f36e3a
