One-dayold male broiler chickens were fed 1 of 4 diets formulated to include different levels of milk protein: casein (CP), whey protein (WP), a combination of equal parts CP and WP (CPW), or no milk protein (NP). Liver glycogen, blood plasma glucose, and triglyceride concentrations were less in NP than in CPW and CP chickens. Liver glycogen concentration was less in CPW than in CP chickens, whereas the concentration was less in NP than in CP chickens. The activities of phosphoenolpyruvate carboxykinase (PEPCK) and malic enzyme (ME) in the liver of CPW and NP chickens were greater than in CP and NP chickens, respectively, and the activities of glucose-6phosphatase (G6Pase) and fructose-1,6-bisphosphatase (FBPase) in the liver of NP chickens were greater than in CP chickens. The activities of PEPCK and ME were higher in NP chickens than in CP chickens, whereas G6Pase and FBPase were higher in CP chickens than in NP chickens. Liver mitochondria from NP chickens showed lower state 3 respiration and mitochondrial permeability transition than CP chickens. It is suggested that the regulation of carbohydrate metabolism in the liver was controlled by the imbalance in the rates of gluconeogenesis and glycogenesis. So this was originally a reply to a comment on another thread (If I can find it), but this one seems better suited to the faq section (It's about the training for a client). So my f988f36e3a
