process control and instrumentation by rp vyasQ: random generator in c language I have a program that generates binary numbers in such a way that each number is either odd or even and so that the frequency of odd and even is both equal. I have a problem with the random generator but I can't find where I'm going wrong. int main() { srand(time(NULL)); for(int i=0;iMystery alive and well "The real purpose of the cat is not to be a domestic pet but to observe and study the surrounding world." Wikipedia Mystery is the sixth novel, and I don't know what that means. But I do know it's about a widower - my widower - and a mystery-fiction junkie, and I want you to get up this morning and read this. I mean it. Go ahead. Get up, get dressed, get out of bed. If you haven't, now's the time. Don't wait. "The real purpose of the cat is not to be a domestic pet but to observe and study the surrounding world." -Cats and their human companions would both find it very hard to be a typical domesticated pet. It's not exactly a way to live if you don't choose to do that by default. It's more about knowing when and where to launch an attack, for example.
