Development of a simplified method for the isolation of two-dimensional networks of lymphoid cells. A simple and rapid method is described for the preparation of single cell-derived two-dimensional cell networks from lymphoid tissues in C57BL/6J mice. A suspension of whole thymus, spleen, and peripheral lymph nodes is obtained from the animal, followed by disaggregation of the tissue with agitation. The cells are filtered through nylon wool, adjusted to density (1.057) by BSA gradient, and centrifuged onto glass microscope slides. The cells adhere to the slide, spreading out into networks of single cells. The cells can be visualized by phase-contrast microscopy and isolated for biochemical studies. The percentage of cells with chromosomes in metaphase and in anaphase is similar in both C57BL/6J and the congenic strain B10.A/SgSn. The number of women arrested in connection with prostitution increased in the first three months of 2013, compared to the same period last year. In the first three months of 2013, B.C. police arrested 152 women, according to data released by the B.C. Prosecution Service. That's up from 132 in the same period last year. Of those arrested in the first three months of 2013, 66 were arrested in Vancouver alone. The increasing number of women arrested in Vancouver is likely attributed to the influx of women fleeing abuse in Central America, who have arrived in Canada with hopes of escaping the violence and poverty in their home countries, says an employment counsellor who works with women escaping violence. "A large percentage of the women who have come to the city of Vancouver are fleeing violence and are escaping from family dynamics," said Janae Hanley, the coordinator of the Vancouver Women's Centre. "Many of them have been through some sort of torture or have been prostituted." Last year in B.C., 45 per cent of those arrested for prostitution were women,
