Aesthetic and functional concerns. The use of grafts in facial and neck surgery is increasing at an unprecedented rate. The purpose of this article is to provide the plastic surgeon with a comprehensive knowledge of the various donor areas and their complications. Important issues surrounding the use of these flaps are discussed. Retrospective review of a 40-year experience. An analysis of 225 consecutive autogenous flaps has demonstrated that a flapless technique may be employed to harvest a skin flap. This means less harvesting of healthy tissue.

Zika virus: Natural history of asymptomatic infection. A rapid, surge of clinical cases in Brazil triggered a policy of lockdown in Roraima state. The impact on the transmission dynamics of the current epidemic and the surveillance programmes will be discussed. We describe the natural history of Zika virus in 95 Brazilian patients diagnosed with mild or asymptomatic Zika virus infection. Zika virus was detected by reverse transcription polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) in blood and urine, and IgM and IgG Zika virus-specific immunoglobulin M (IgM) and G (IgG) antibodies were measured with enzyme immunoassays. Zika virus DNA was detected in urine by RT-PCR for 86 (90.5%) of 95 patients and 23 (24.2%) had at least one serum sample with IgM antibodies (IgM(+)). Twenty-seven (28.4%) were IgM(-) and 71 (74.7%) were IgG(+) at enrolment. Seven patients (7.4%) had a single IgM(+) or IgM(+) and IgG(-) episode. A non-elevated viral load was detected in 2 of the 30 tested specimens. Patients with higher viral loads presented a lower positivity in the IgG response and were more likely to have fever and arthralgia and show a more prolonged viremia. We observed that the detection of IgG antibodies was more sensitive than IgM for detecting Zika virus infection. Our findings indicate that the natural history of Zika virus infection in asymptomatic patients is similar to that observed in patients with mild symptoms. They also show that serum IgG response was 04aeff104c
