

Onchocerciasis focal infection is widely prevalent in five villages in Western Cameroon. Onchocerciasis is one of the most debilitating and economically important parasitic diseases in humans and has great public health significance in Cameroon. The purpose of this paper is to show the extent of foci and heterogeneity in the infection in five villages, identified as endemic in a previous study, and for which microfilarial loads were estimated in 523 individuals. Overall, 96.3%, 98.0%, 81.0%, 76.1% and 91.9% of individuals were found to be positive for Onchocerca volvulus, with a mean microfilarial load of 679.5 mf/mg of skin. Age distribution revealed that the extent of infection increased with age. An age-dependent, marked increase in the number of lesions, microfilaria load, prevalence, and intensity of infection was noticed with age, especially in children. The overall prevalence, intensity and extent of infection were much higher in children compared with adults and in female than in male participants. Focal infections were found in two villages and their extent increased with age. Several individuals with high microfilarial loads were also found to be positive for Loa loa and, rarely, with M. sp. These results indicate that a major and potentially highly efficient programme for elimination of the disease in Western Cameroon may be undertaken if a cohort of 10-15 year old individuals who live in endemic foci is treated.

Yummy Gummy Bear Recipes! This is my first try at cooking and I'm rather pleased with the end result. The best part is that because I used protein powder, it was a workout! Each recipe serves one so if you want to make more, just multiply as many servings as needed Click the link below to see how easy it is to make protein-loaded and delicious gummy bears. Directions: 1. Mix protein powder, stevia, and water in a plastic mixing bowl. Use an electric mixer if desired. 2. Blend all ingredients for 15-20 seconds on medium speed. 3. Place mixture in a pan and heat until it's hot enough to the touch. 4. Heat in on medium heat for 3-5 minutes and stir until it begins to thicken. 5. Remove from the heat, and add the gel food color and stir until it becomes glossy. 6. Cool until it
