The genes encoding the CC chemokines exhibit species-specific patterns of expression during development; each gene has a unique temporal and tissue-specific expression pattern in humans. See e.g., Rabinovich et al., Nature, 356:607-614 (1992); Samano et al., Nature, 358:152-155 (1992). Each of the CC chemokine genes is expressed as a single copy gene, has a different transcriptional initiation site, and terminates with a unique 3'-sequence. The proteins share 80-100% homology within their putative cysteine-rich motifs and act as chemoattractant factors for monocytes, memory T cells, and basophils. RANTES, MCP-1, and MCP-2 are each encoded by a multigene family that contains multiple alternative transcripts. See, e.g., Holmes et al., Cell, 72:731-741 (1993). Only
