A neurodegenerative disorder associated with spastic paraplegia and infantile dystonia is caused by a mutation in the MID1 gene. We report on two siblings with a progressive neurodegenerative disorder with onset in early infancy, who died in their 8th and 11th years respectively. The first patient had a spastic paraplegia with progressive dystonia and a normal life span, whereas the second developed a severe infantile dystonia with initial episodes of choreoathetosis and a typical course of dystonia over the following five years, with deterioration in later years. Both had prominent coarse facial features and mental retardation. Brain MRI showed basal ganglia abnormalities in the second patient. Post-mortem examination disclosed abnormalities of the cortico-striatal-pallidal-thalamic neuronal circuitry. Microtubule accumulation was present in the brain stem, anterior horns of the spinal cord and pyramidal cells of the cortical layers in both siblings. Staining of the stellate bodies, which are targets for gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA)_B receptors in cerebral cortex and thalamus, was sparse, indicating deficient stimulation of these receptors by endogenous GABA. GAD67-immunohistochemistry showed relatively normal cortical expression in the two patients, but reduced staining of the thalamus and brain stem compared with controls. Three of the four patients in previously published kindreds with MID1 mutations had initially non-progressive spastic paraplegia. MID1 mutations occur frequently in other neuromuscular disorders with presumed GABA dysfunction. The clinical heterogeneity and the non-progressive course are discussed in the light of the current knowledge of MID1's function and mode of inheritance.
