The surface of the iPad Pro is dirt cheap. Target price is apparently around $99 with Tax. The Surface Pro 2 is dirt rich which is why it costs more, but it lasts longer. However, many of you want something that has a digital pen and all the bells and whistles. The Microsoft Surface Pro 3 is flawless. There's nothing lacking in the latest Surface Pro. However, it costs about an extra $100 and it's still a notebook. You can just as easily consider the iPad Pro a notebook with fantastic stylus support. I'm disappointed in the lack of new extra features.

I certainly noticed them in the first LR5 testing versions; e.g., "Use parallel processing to facilitate image editing." (Nope, can't say that's any different, or personal, to be honest.)

So... I guess I'll just upgrade later. Unless the new version doesn't support whatever Isadora used in LR4 (I think I'm wrong -- not sure), in which case it will be a few weeks before I upgrade. I'm not sure if I'll resist the urge to upgrade when it goes into free ... that is, when it replaces LR 4.x.* (Actually, maybe it's just not recommended for me to let the system permantly go over the LR 4.x.x version.) Kiran, I have noticed that LR evolved to bring a lot of new features and professional tools. I agree with you that far more work is done on next LR version. It should be done in right order like it always was FCP. But this time it seems like it's happening too fast, so people don't have time even to test initial final version. I suspect in a near future you will see beta and final version for LR. But my opinion and suggestion are only my opinion.
