Photoshop CC 2015 includes new features and tools that help you get creative. Here's a glimpse of some of them:

- Pixel-based refraction and lens effects for a stylized look.
- New hatch effect.
- Hilo for pixel-based lighting tools.
- Removal of CAFCAN (Color Attribute File for Camera Manufacturers) file format.
- Style Manager for creating styles directly from the style panel.

If you are a member of Adobe Design Alliance, you can create smaller versions of your documents while they are reviewed to help avoid losing valuable content. The follow-up comment is a good one. With Adobe, the organization of the objects is something that has been improved. So, the continued improvement of organization and the import of various files in various apps is an advantageous for the debut of this new version. The author also feels that the camera noise has been addressed; however, he has noticed more noise based on the new AI software. In my experience, Lightroom isn't perfect, but it is still hard to avoid noise bias when I import a JPEG from the camera and then use the JPEG as my master file. I would take this review as being fairly favorable, because it certainly makes my job as a photographer in terms of basic Photoshop much easier. Of course, this is not the only update to the Photoshop suite. A lot of the other improvements include new features in the "One-Step" utility. Notably, users can now create templates for custom actions instead of creating individual shortcuts to particular actions. Other updates include additional steps in the "Path" tool for the renditions. There is a new adjustment tool for waters and pencils (although it is not very powerful) as well as new various ways to join objects, increase detail, and blur texture. There are also new sequences for making patterns and adjusting pixel shapes. In addition, the "Edit" menu is easier to navigate. I found the new "Adjustment" panel to be hard to navigate as well. It can't replace the Adjustments panel because it has "very limited," but it is more convenient.

Halloween has been around far longer than I remember. For me, it just came at the perfect time in terms of people just getting off work, freer to go out and do what they want, and many people actually want to have a good time because they can "duck out" for a while, and have some fun on their own! I suppose they did it Sunday nights, because I never remember seeing a "haunted house" in the back of a grocery store. Sure, I haven't been shopping at a supermarket lately, but I do beat tourism, and I might even buy groceries online. That's not to say there aren't fun haunted houses, but most of them are at amusement parks, and those haven't even been around for quite some time. This is why the season is great! People can lose a day, a week, or even a month, and then see costumes they either haven't seen before, or maybe costumes they want to use. Go for it! I, personally, would say that I think Halloween is even better during this time, but I am really going to miss them in July!
